STORY OF CHEF LAKI

From an early age, Laki was fascinated by the magical world of cooking. The smell of crushed spices, the crackling of wood fire and the subtle sounds of culinary finesse all added to the overwhelming anticipation to indulge in his father's cooking. Growing up in a small rural town, fresh produce was available all day and rice from paddies owned by the family.

Traditional Sri Lanka is rich in culture with culinary roots spanning more than 2500 years. Ancient wisdom is still present in lifestyle with most ingredients in food selected for their medicinal, healing and nutritional properties. The island nation has observed relentless upheavals throughout the ages with some influence on the country's cuisine. At Three Elephants & Co, we offer the same diversity seen today and celebrated everywhere.

At the age of 24, Laki moved to Birchip in regional Victoria and soon found himself at the heart of the local scene. He was head chef at the Birchip Hotel, preparing and cooking meals for the hungry locals and visitors alike. When he saw the endless Mallee farms that reached far beyond the horizon, it reminded him of the same picturesque landscape where he grew up.

He formed a strong bond with the local community members and shared their hardships particularly during the drought years. Socialising with local farmers and preparing meals 'til late in the night during the harvesting season are his most cherished memories. Through his cooking, Laki shared his childhood experience with the people of Birchip, which will always remain his second home.

Laki carefully selects seasonal produce to create the most wholesome and flavoursome meals, adding his own variation and style to develop a truly unique experience. Three Elephants & Co is the beginning of a new journey.
